...As he prepared to depart Benghazi (in 1943), Colonel Kane closed his War Diary with these final words:

"Now that the time has come to leave the Western Desert, to bring an end to an era, I must say "so long" to each of those brave warriors who did not complete their last mission, still flying out there in the Blue. To you men who fly on forever I send that part of me which cannot be separated and is bound to you for all time; I send to you those of our hopes and dreams that never quite came true, the joyous laughter and showery tears of our boyhood, the marvelous mysteries of our adolescence, the glorious strength and tragic illusions of our young manhood, all these that were and perhaps would have been, I leave in your care, out there in the Blue.

Keep up your airspeed; and don't break a wing; hold her steady out there. One of these days, I will take off to join you. When I do, I hope you will teach the Old Man how to fly."

From the War Diary of Colonel John R. "Killer" Kane.
